HARRY O'BRIEN.

It has often been remarked that in no town of whatever size are there so many well dressed men as in Greenfield. There is a certain style about the suits that stamps them as being created by an artist. Harry O'Brien the well know sartorial artist on Midway Avenue is responsible for a great number of those well fitting, well appearing suits. In this issue we give a good interior view of his handsome shop which is always stocked with numerous bolts of suitings, all of the latest colors and styles. He makes it a point never to keep anything on hand that smacks of antiquity—which from a tailor's point of view means anything over a year old. The fastidious dresser will find here not only the cloth he is looking for and the artists to give it fit and shape and grace, but also many valuable suggestions as to what is au fait in the world of dress. Although O'Brien makes suits and overcoats along the lines laid down by the most famous merchant tailors of New York, his prices are within the reach of all. The number of his patrons is constantly increasing and his reputation as a "dresser of men" is not confined to Highland county. Clothes of course do not make the man but they go a long way towards helping him along in life. Thus is Harry O'Brien doing much to make his patrons successful.
